Introduction: The body of your abstract should be an explicit summary of your presentation that describe the rationale for the research project including relevant background information, methods, results, and a brief discussion/conclusion.

Methodology: Your abstract should also describe the research methods; this section should include a concise description of the process by which you conducted your research.

Results: List the results or outcomes of the work you have done so far. If your project is not yet complete, you may still include preliminary results.

Conclusion/Clinical significance: Finally, the abstract should close with a statement of the project’s implications and contributions to its field. It should convince readers that the project is interesting, valuable, and worth investigating further

Acknowledgments: If your project was supported with internal or external funding, you are strongly encouraged to cite the funding source and/or provide an acknowledgment.

References: Use a brief numbered style, e.g., [1], [2]. References should appear in numerical order in the reference list:
